flies to boy's aid

Boy was headed to New York City for fundraiser ◆ Hundreds of bloggers also in town ◆ More than 2,500 people donated to get him to N.Y.C., blogger says

Air Canada found itself in the eye of a social media storm Thursday after breaking a terminally ill boy's $15,000 wheelchair on a flight to New York City.

Tanner Bawn, 10, of Vancouver, has muscular dystrophy and is immobile without the electric wheelchair.

Air Canada originally told his family he may have to wait until Monday to get his chair back. But by Thursday afternoon he was mobile, beaming and on his way to Toys "R" Us.

The boy's aunt, Toronto-based blogger Catherine Connors, tweeted the good news update Thursday afternoon.

"Tanner has his chair back," she said. "Thank you Internet. Heart explodes."

Connors said the airline took the chair apart for shipping and couldn't put it back together when they arrived in LaGuardia Airport in Queens, N.Y., Wednesday.

"It's just not acceptable to be breaking wheelchairs ... We do our best not to do that, but, unfortunately, sometimes these things happen."
PETER FITZPATRICK, AIR CANADA SPOKESPERSON

The news spread rapidly after Tanner arrived in New York.

"The Internet sprung into action last night but Air Canada didn't," Connors said.

The family had to use scarves to strap Tanner into the temporary manual wheelchair the airline provided.

A new level of competition

Businessman allegedly targeted for death by rival's employee

The cash-for-gold competition between two businesses is heating up as gold prices soar, but Jack Berkovits says he never thought he would see a rival's employee charged with trying to have him killed.

Berkovits said a man he thought was a customer informed him he was hired "to blow your brains out," and the alleged conspirator is an unlikely figure — a 71-year-old woman. It's been a frightening experience for Berkovits, even though it almost defies credulity.

Though Berkovits said the competition between his company, Omni Jewelcrafters, and the Jewellery Buyer has been more aggressive of late, the current situation for him began two weeks ago when meeting with a customer. Berkovits and the man sat down at a coffee shop and made small talk for a while before the man said he thought Berkovits was a nice person and he couldn't "do it."

Berkovits said he asked what he meant, and when the man said he couldn't kill Berkovits, the stunned jeweller asked why the man would want to kill him.

"Because I was hired to," he recalled the man saying.

Maria Konstan, 71, an employee of the Jewellery Buyer, faces two counts each of threatening death or bodily harm and counselling to commit an indictable offence, and one of threatening to damage property. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sunrise Propane report will be made public

The details of an investigation into a series of massive propane explosions will be made public after a city councillor created a public outcry by leaking excerpts.

The Ontario Fire Marshal's Office was already distilling the nearly 300-page report into an executive summary to be made public when Coun. Maria Augimeri put out her own release, a spokesman said.

Reports talked of the "confidential" paper and quoted Augimeri and residents near the Sunrise Propane blast site demanding the full report be released. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Findings

- The report found a leak during an illegal propane transfer was to blame for a series of explosions Aug. 10, 2008.

News in brief

City issues final order for Bronfman

FENCE. Paul Bronfman has received final notice from the city to tear down illegally erected fences around his Forest Hill mansion, but the movie mogul will likely get a chance to plead his case with the next crop of councillors. Enforcement of the order is on hold because Bronfman recently submitted a revised application for retroactive approval for some of the fencing. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

City weighs options on Casa Loma

DISPUTE. The keys to Casa Loma could change hands if the city remains unhappy with the Kiwanis Club, a spokesperson suggested this week. Staff recommendations on how to resolve the management dispute at the tourist landmark could come at the Aug. 25-26 council meeting. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Distracted driving down in June: OPP

Fewer people on provincial roads were caught talking or texting while driving in June, Ontario Provincial Police said Thursday.

The most recent figures show 496 people were charged that month under Ontario's distracted driving law on roads patrolled by the OPP, down from 778 charges in May.

A total of almost 3,800 charges have been laid since officers first widely enforced the law last February.

$125
Tickets for distracted driving carry an out-of-court fine of $125.

OPP Const. Dave Woodford said officers will wait to see if the June number is a fluke or a trend indicating drivers are getting the message.

It does not include charges laid by municipal police. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ontario's Special Investigations Unit has been called in to determine what happened at a North York highrise where a woman plunged from an 11th-floor balcony Wednesday.

The incident began when Toronto police were called to an apartment at 150 Graydon Hall Dr. at around 5 p.m. The address is registered to "Oriental Sunshine Exotic Massage."

Officers arrested at least one man, while a woman believed to be in her 20s was rushed to hospital with serious injuries. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Service dog barred from buffet area

- Owner says there were no problems with canine during previous visit
- Food safety manager says animal ban doesn't apply to service dogs

A woman is planning to file a complaint with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario against a Scarborough restaurant after she was asked to leave when she brought her service dog to the buffet area.

Evelyn Snyder, who has spinal muscular atrophy, visited Imperial Buffet near Eglinton Avenue East and Warden Avenue Sunday afternoon along with her husband and a friend. She had a service dog with her, a black Lab named Nova, who helps her with operations she cannot perform due to her muscle weakness.

"They put us at a table, and as soon as we started to get up to the buffet (with Nova), they said, 'No, no, you can't go there,'" said Snyder.

CARLOS OSORIO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Evelyn Snyder and Nova.

Snyder's friend, Leslie Carnagie, said the manager showed them "a piece of paper (that said), 'Due to board health restrictions, service dogs are not allowed near the food; they must remain at the table.'"

Carnagie told staff this was discrimination, and her friend's dog could not be left unattended.

Finally, they were asked to leave the establishment.

When reached Wednesday, Peyton Kong, the restaurant manager involved in the incident, said they implemented the policy after a customer complained to Toronto Public Health a few months ago about allergies after a dog was allowed in the restaurant. A health inspector later informed his colleague, Sali Chen, that they cannot allow any dogs in the food serving area. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A view of food on The Cutting Veg

Small-scale farms gaining followers ◗ People like knowing the source of their food, one volunteer says

CARLOS OSORIO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Daniel Hoffmann and Emily Adam harvest garlic scapes at The Cutting Veg.

Early Sunday morning, nine people pack into a grey van near Bathurst Street and St. Clair Avenue and head north to where the houses stop and the farmland begins.

Their destination is the McVean Farm, a 20-hectare slab of land in Brampton that's cultivated by more than a dozen people. But the rows of vegetables and herbs are easy to miss.

The northern-most crops bump against a subdivision of houses. The road hugging the land is being widened to make room for the development, the construction obscuring the farm's sign and entrance.

"In some ways, it's hard to think there's a farm here," said Andrea Peloso as she crouches beside a row of potato plants, yanking out weeds by hand.

She is among a team of interns working for The Cutting Veg, an organic enterprise run by Daniel Hoffmann that rents 1.6 hectares on the McVean lot.

Today, people like Hoffmann are trying to reconnect urbanites to the farm, and in doing so, re-establish the farmer as a neighbour — one not defined by proximity, but by a common, more intimate connection — food.

It's an attempt to alter the decades-long trend that has seen farms grow into massive operations often sending food to farflung locations while at the same time suburban developments gobble up valuable farmland.

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Growing trend

- Whether for environmental concerns, food quality or just to support the local industry, more and more city dwellers are buying food from local farms, much like they did a half-century ago when crops grew where there are now subdivisions and strip malls.
- Today, people like Hoffmann are trying to reconnect urbanites to the farm, and in doing so, restore the farmer as a neighbour.

Grits blamed for long-term care wait list

Ontario's Opposition says the Liberal government is wasting money on bureaucrats instead of addressing a growing shortage of long-term care beds.

The Progressive Conservatives say the government's failure to make progress on its aging at home strategy has allowed the wait list for long-term care beds to swell to 24,000 people.

Opposition Leader Tim Hudak says Local Health Integration Networks set up by the Liberals mismanaged the $250-million program that is supposed to help more seniors live at home.

Hudak promises to scrap the networks and put the money into front-line health services if the Tories win next year's election.

The New Democrats say the government should scrap competitive bidding for home-care contracts, which they say allowed giant U.S. chains to outbid local providers like the Victorian Order of Nurses.

The NDP say the lack of proper home care means more patients wait in hospitals for a long-term care bed, backing up the entire system all the way to the emergency room.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

$200M

Hudak says the Liberals wasted $200 million on the networks, which the Tories call an unnecessary level of bureaucracy for the government to hide behind when it makes unpopular decisions like laying off nurses.

Dorm room decorating 101

Think practically with storage bins and a stylish trash can Avoid white duvets — patterns will better hide the inevitable spills and stains

Kathlene McGuinness has some know-how in furnishing the small spaces that post-secondary students often find themselves crammed into each September.

She already has one degree, and is heading into her third year of interior design studies at Ryerson University. Originally from Halifax, she's lived in about 10 apartments — on the West Coast and in Toronto.

"I've had a lot of experience with poor, rundown basement apartments — never a dorm room myself, but lots of small cramped spaces," said McGuinness.

"With rentals and dorm rooms, it's always hard because you can't really change a lot. You have to be innovative."

"So many people put so much crap in their rooms that you don't need, like teddy bears. Who needs their teddy bears at college?"
LEAH VALIQUETTE, ALGONQUIN COLLEGE GRADUATE

Students, of course, are usually on a tight budget so McGuinness is a big fan of looking for discarded furniture and repurposing it.

"Taking old things you find by the side of the road and giving them a facelift can definitely make the difference in your otherwise extremely poor apartment," she said.

"I found two antique ironing boards and I cut them up and I turned them into a desk," she said, adding she and her partners in the dorm project drove around and found old dresser drawers that were transformed into a vertical shelving unit above the desk.

When students leave home, they're often gaining creative control over their space for the first time. McGuinness said the space will appear more adult if artwork is framed.

"Having posters tacked onto your wall ... it's the difference between being in high school and university. If you have it in a frame, it's going to keep it, protect it, and it's going to make your room look so much more clean and sophisticated."

But McGuinness cautioned that these neophyte decorators should suppress the urge to "go a little bit crazy."

"Some people have collections ... but 100 snowglobes make you look a little weird," she said. "Two snowglobes make you look quirky and fun. So it's all about just editing it down and keeping it simple." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hide clutter, save space: Designer

Janise Saikaley, the owner and lead designer of Uproar Design in Ottawa, said students should only bring what they need, and think about storage.

"I'm a bit of a design snob, so I like things to be put away," she said, recommending a night table with drawers rather than open shelves, for instance.

She advised taking along a trunk to keep items hidden from view, and purchasing storage boxes for under the bed.

Because floor area is often at a premium, she said students should use their vertical space and wall space. A mirror will add to the illusion of more space. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Beauty rest

- Saikaley also recommended buying a great set of sheets because they're key to getting a good night's sleep.

Canadian teen one step closer to leaving Cuba

- Police order blocking teen's departure lifted
- 19-year-old stranded since April car accident

The uncle of an Ontario man stuck in Cuba following a car accident says a police order blocking his nephew's departure has been lifted.

It's the latest development that brings Cody LeCompte one step closer to returning home.

A block on the Simcoe, Ont., man's passport was lifted Wednesday after the 19-year-old signed an agreement to return to Cuba if there is a trial.

His uncle, Gary Parmenter, says consular officials told them Thursday that a "hold departure order" has now been lifted by local police.

LeCompte hopes to board a flight home Friday.

▶ Cody LeCompte

His struggle with Cuban law began in late April when the rental car he was driving was sideswiped by a pickup truck and some of his passengers were injured.

The family tried to catch a flight home a few days later, but LeCompte was told he could not leave the country because accidents resulting in death or injury are treated as crimes.

His mother and Parmenter were passengers in the car, along with his uncle's Cuban fiancée.

Parmenter's fiancée was severely injured and needed an operation to remove part of her liver. She has since fully recovered.

The driver of the truck was not injured.

Premiers talk cash

Long-form census on the table as provincial heads talk stimulus spending at annual meeting in Winnipeg

Canada's premiers say the private sector needs to step up when the federal government snaps shut its pocketbook on stimulus spending, but the leaders are all over the map on how Ottawa should wind things down.

A $47-billion package to boost the economy was introduced in January 2009, but the federal cash register is to close March 31. Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty suggested Thursday it's time for others to take over.

"It's not the job of the government to act as a permanent driver of economic growth," McGuinty said at the annual premiers meeting in Winnipeg. "Think of this year as the hand-off year. We're going to run as quickly and hard as we can in this relay race and on March 31, 2011, we're going to give the baton to the private sector."

"You're not going to put up the walls and then say, 'Sorry folks, we've run out of time so you're on your own when it comes to putting in the roof.' I think that would be a mistake."
DALTON MCGUINTY

But McGuinty added it would be wrong to say projects partly completed can't be finished because of the March deadline.

British Columbia Premier Gordon Campbell suggested that companies and businesses may need some encouragement.

"Governments have done a lot to stimulate the economy. Now it's time for the private sector to step up and governments to try and take down unnecessary burdens ... and barriers for the private sector to invest," he said.

Alberta seeks support for oilsands with new advert

Alberta is trying to bolster support for the oilsands with a colourful ad in a newspaper in Winnipeg where Canada's premiers are holding their annual meeting.

But environmentalists say the ad with its bright green background is a clear ploy to push back at oilsands critics, including other provinces.

Dale Marshall with the David Suzuki Foundation said the ad doesn't bode well for what will happen at the meeting when environmental issues are discussed.

Marshall said environmentalists, who are also meeting in Winnipeg, want more collaboration between provinces in tackling greenhouse gas emissions.

U.S. helicopters fly flood relief missions in Swat

Pakistan's response has been criticized Waters head for riverbanks populated by hundreds of thousands

KHALLID TANVEER/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Pakistan army soldiers in a helicopter rescue stranded families Thursday in central Pakistan.

U.S. Army choppers flew their first relief missions in Pakistan's flood-ravaged northwest Thursday, airlifting hundreds of stranded people to safety from a devastated tourist town and distributing emergency aid.

In the country's south, authorities began evacuating 500,000 people as the worst monsoon rains in decades threatened new destruction.

The floods have already killed an estimated 1,500 people over the past week, most in the northwest, the centre of Pakistan's fight against al-Qaida and the Taliban. An estimated 4.2 million Pakistanis have been affected, including many in eastern Punjab province, which has seen numerous villages swallowed by water.

The flooding is one of several crises that has hit Pakistan since mid-July, including a suicide bombing in the northwest city of Peshawar, a plane crash that killed 152 people in the capital, and a spurt of politically motivated killings that have left dozens dead in Karachi.

Foreign governments and aid agencies have stepped into help the beleaguered government. It has been toughest in the northwest, which has not seen such flooding since 1929, and where many bridges and roads are washed out.

Four U.S. Chinook helicopters landed in the resort town of Kalam in the Swat Valley, which has been cut off for more than a week, according to an Associated Press reporter there. They flew hundreds of people — many of them vacationing there — to safer areas lower down, he said. The northwest valley is a former Pakistani Taliban stronghold.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said 800 people were evacuated and relief goods distributed.

The United States is unpopular in Pakistan, and Washington will be hoping the relief missions will help improve its image. But the mission could draw criticism from nationalist politicians and others in Pakistan who are hostile to the idea of American boots on the ground.

Islamist groups have staged their own relief efforts in the northwest. One, Falah-e-Insaniat, is a charity with alleged ties to Lashkar-e-Taiba, the militant group accused in the 2008 attacks in Mumbai.

Two buses carrying high school band students to an amusement park were involved in a freeway wreck with a semi tractor and another passenger vehicle Thursday that left two people dead and dozens injured. A transportation department spokesman could not confirm if the victims were school bus passengers.

Next steps

- If the mud plug in the blown-out well is successfully augmented with the cement, the next step involves a 5,500-metre relief well that intersects with the old well just above the vast undersea reservoir that had been losing oil freely.
- The hope has been to pump mud and possibly cement down the relief well after its completion later this month, supplementing the work in this week's so-called "static kill" and stopping up the well from the bottom.

BP pumps cement into blown well

BP pumped cement into its blown-out oil well in the Gulf of Mexico Thursday, hoping to start sealing it for good a day after it forced a torrent of heavy mud down the wellhead and pushed the crude back to its underground source.

The next step in the so-called "static kill" was another bright spot as the tide appeared to be turning in the months-long battle to contain the oil, with a U.S. federal report this week indicating that only about one-quarter of the spilled crude remains in the Gulf and is degrading quickly.

Even so, Joey Yerkes, a fisherman in Destin, Fla., said he and other boaters, swimmers and scuba divers continue to find oil and tar balls in areas that have been declared clear.

"The end to the leak is good news, but the damage has been done," Yerkes said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Facebook exposes Prince Charming as a toad afterall

Woman found out her husband married his mistress on Facebook He claims his first marriage was void

Dread of the unknown hung in the air as Lynn France typed two words into the search box on Facebook: The name of the woman with whom she believed her husband was having an affair.

Click. And there it was, the stuff of nightmares for any spouse, cuckolded or not. Wedding photos. At Walt Disney World, no less, featuring her husband literally dressed as Prince Charming. His new wife, a pretty blond, was a glowing Sleeping Beauty, surrounded by footmen.

"I was numb with shock, to tell you the truth," says France, an occupational therapist from Westlake, a Cleveland suburb.

Affairs were once illicit encounters whispered about and often difficult to prove. But in the age of Facebook and lightning-fast communication, marital indiscretions are much easier to track — especially if potentially damaging photographic evidence is posted online.

Despite the Disney World wedding, the couple was able to reconcile.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"People who engage in these sorts of behaviours now have the option of trying to keep things private or turning it into a spectacle and becoming their own reality show."
ANDREW ZASHIN, LYNN FRANCE'S LAWYER

"I just wanted to believe the good when he came to me and said, 'Let's reconcile, I love you,'" she said.

That ended three months ago, when Lynn says she was cleaning the sink when her husband took the couple's two-year-old son out of her arms and said he was going to give him some milk. Minutes later, she heard the car running.

She hasn't seen her sons since. John France had taken them to Tampa, Fla., where he currently lives with his new wife and, according to his attorney, is seeking custody of their children.

The only glimpse of her children now comes, ironically, from the same Facebook page where she found those wedding photos.

Eight soldiers suffered minor injuries Thursday after a Canadian Chinook helicopter was forced to make a hard landing and burst into flames near a remote village southwest of Kandahar city.

There were five crew members and 15 passengers on board the Chinook CH147 that landed near the village of Armarah, about 20 kilometres away from Afghanistan's second-largest city.

Record high ocean temperatures and the development of a climate phenomenon known as La Nina will keep the Atlantic hurricane season on track to be the busiest since 2005, government forecasters said Thursday.

The updated forecast calls for 14 to 20 named tropical storms.

A Pacific Ocean phenomenon called La Nina developed in July, reducing wind shear in the Atlantic and making it easier for storms to take shape.

Ocean temperatures are exceptionally high, and the warmest since 2005 when hurricanes Katrina and Rita ripped into the same part of the Gulf Coast now coping with one of the world's worst oil spills.

LONG-FORM FUROR

Grits want data on census

Liberals are calling for the Commons industry committee to reconvene over the Tories' refusal to produce documents related to its decision to drop the long-form census.

Liberal MP Mark Holland says the Conservatives are ignoring a committee order to release the documents.

The industry committee wants Industry Minister Tony Clement to provide "all documents and emails between Statistics Canada, the Privy Council Office and the Minister of Industry's office on changes to the 2011 census."

The Tories said in June they would scrap the mandatory long-form census, which asks questions including the number of bedrooms in the family home.

Tories cast wider net over lobbying

SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Stockwell Day says a review of the Lobbying Act will take place this fall and he's "open to suggestions."

New rules cover backbenchers
Day wants 'transparent' system

The Harper government is casting a wider net over lobbying activities on Parliament Hill.

New rules will now cover backbenchers and political staff.

Lobbying should be "open and transparent," Treasury Board president Stockwell Day said.

People should know who is classified as an official lobbyist, he said.

Regulations restricting ex-cabinet ministers and their staffs from pitching the government for corporate and personal interests will now apply to all MPs and senators, Day said.

Staff in the opposition leader's office also will be covered, he added.

The new rules would continue to require that registered lobbyists report their activities to the Office of the Commissioner of Lobbying.

But they do not put the onus on MPs to report contact with lobbyists.

Day was non-committal about whether the onus might be shifted.

NDP House leader Libby Davies welcomed the changes but said the onus should be on MPs to report their dealings with lobbyists.

Lobby lowdown

Two cases concerning lobbying have made news.

- The Rahim Jaffer case: A Commons committee probed the business dealings of the former Tory caucus chair. He is not registered as a lobbyist and denied any wrongdoing. The RCMP said no charges would be laid.
- The Derek Lee case: He was accused of lobbying because the website of a Toronto law firm said he pitched the government on behalf of clients. He says the information was inaccurate.

Poll: Few care about crime

A newly released government poll suggests most Canadians don't see crime as a big issue — even as the Tories press on with their get-tough agenda.

When asked in January which issue the Tories should focus on most, only one per cent of people answered crime.

The top answers were the economy, recession, jobs and health.

The telephone survey of 1,500 people was conducted by the Finance Department.

The poll's margin of error was plus or minus 2.5 percentage points.

Firm paid parties illegal cash

An engineering firm has admitted making illegal contributions to Quebec's political parties.

Three subsidiaries of the Axor company admit they funnelled more than $150,000 through employees — $113,500 to the Grits, $34,000 to the Parti Québécois, and $5,000 to the Action démocratique.

Quebec's landmark political financing law, now the model for a similar law in place at the federal level, forbids donations more than $3,000. It also forbids donations from companies.

The company subsidiaries must now pay $88,000 in fines, and the political parties have been ordered to return the money.

Economy my priority: Harper

Stephen Harper is talking up the economy and playing down an election.

The prime minister told a summer caucus of Conservative MPs and senators Thursday that the economy will be the government's top priority.

In a brief speech, Harper said the economy is recovering and "Canadian solutions are leading the way globally."

Harper showed no appetite for a fall election, saying Canadians want him to concentrate on the challenges facing the country.

"We know there are some in the opposition coalition again threatening an election. But, colleagues, that is not what Canadians want," he said.

"Canadians want us to continue to focus on governing and especially, colleagues, they want us to focus on the economy."

There had been wide speculation that Harper, enjoying a big lead in the polls, might call an autumn election.

But new polls suggest the Tories have fallen below 30 per cent popularity and into a statistical tie with the Liberals.

Report fuels call for more access to cancer drugs

A new British report ranks Canada 13th in usage of cancer drugs launched during the last five years

Groups that advocate for cancer patients are using a new report from the United Kingdom to bolster their call for greater access to cancer drugs in Canada.

The report says that of 14 countries in a study, Canada ranked 13th in usage of cancer drugs launched in the last five years.

The Cancer Advocacy Coalition of Canada is calling on the federal, provincial and territorial ministers of health to create a national catastrophic drug plan for cancer patients. It says the U.K. study confirms Canadians don't have reasonable, timely access to the newest, most effective cancer drugs.

"Levels of drug usage alone should not be used as a measure of services."
REPORT, EXTENT AND CAUSES OF INTERNATIONAL VARIATIONS IN DRUG USAGE

Aaron Levo, acting director of national public issues for the Canadian Cancer Society, says people need to worry about their health when they have cancer — not how they're going to pay for drugs.

Of the 14 countries studied, only New Zealand ranked lower in usage of cancer drugs launched in the last five years.

The report, entitled Extent and Causes of International Variations in Drug Usage, said it's important to stress there is not always a consensus about what the optimum level of drug usage in different disease areas would be.

"The appropriate level of usage may vary because of different factors at work in different health economies," the report said. "Patient representatives consulted during this study stressed that levels of drug usage alone should not be used as a measure of the quality of services."

NUCLEAR TALKS

IRAN DETERMINED TO CONTINUE

As Iran and world powers prepare for new nuclear talks, letters by Tehran's envoys to top international officials and shared with The Associated Press suggest major progress is unlikely, with Tehran combative and unlikely to offer any concessions.

The letters address two sets of talks tentatively set to resume this fall.

In one negotiation round, the U.S. Russia, China, France Britain and Germany will again push for an Iranian commitment to freeze enrichment. The other will try to revive talks between Iran, Washington, Paris and Moscow on a fuel swap for Tehran's research nuclear reactor.

A letter addressed to Catherine Ashton, the EU foreign policy chief, slams her offer to resume talks a day after the UN Security Council passed its fourth set of sanctions, calling it "astonishing," and describing subsequent EU and U.S. sanctions as "even more astonishing."

"This kind of behaviour ... is absolutely unacceptable," says the letter from Iran's top nuclear negotiator, Saeed Jalili.

The second letter says that "irrational conditions" imposed by the West are blocking a new round of the fuel swap talks. The previous meeting between Iran and the five permanent Security Council members plus Germany in October ended inconclusively on an enrichment freeze, but led to agreement to start the fuel swap negotiations. That, in turn, foundered after Tehran balked at shipping out most of its low-enriched uranium in exchange for fuel rods for the research reactor.

While Iran says it is now ready for a swap, its interlocutors say the terms must be renegotiated because Tehran has since enriched much more uranium, meaning that it would still have enough to enrich to weapons grade even if it now shipped out the original amount agreed upon.

Hiroshima remembered

First memorial with U.S. representative in attendance ◐ Seen as paving the way for Obama to visit the site, which would be a first for a U.S. leader

The site of the world's worst atomic bomb attack echoed with choirs and Buddhist prayers yesterday as Hiroshima prepared to mark its biggest memorial yet and the first to be attended by the U.S. and other major nuclear powers.

Washington's decision to send U.S. Ambassador John Roos was considered by the State Department to be the right time to do so and it was a chance to push U.S. President Barack Obama's goal of nuclear disarmament.

Hiroshima's mayor has praised that position.

"The only way to ensure that such weapons will never again be used is to eliminate them all. There must be no place in our world for such indiscriminate weapons."

▶ A woman joins a candle vigil Thursday in front of the illuminated Atomic Bomb Dome in Hiroshima, Japan, on the eve of the 65th anniversary of the world's first atomic bomb attack.

"We believe the attendance of the nuclear powers will bolster a global desire to abolish nuclear weapons," Mayor Tadatoshi Akiba said in a statement.

Washington's decision to attend the anniversary has been welcomed by Japan's government, but has generated complex feelings among some Japanese, who see the bombing as unjustified and want the United States to apologize.

Concerns that attending the ceremony — an emotional event beginning with the offering of water to the dead and the ringing of a bell to soothe their souls — would reopen old wounds that kept the U.S. away until this year.

Hiroshima has invited Obama to visit the city, and he has expressed interest in doing so while he is in office.

But such a visit would be highly controversial.

Canadian dollar takes run at parity

Analysts warn it's more illusion than reality Compared to all other currencies, still under radar

The Canadian dollar is taking yet another run at parity, but this time reaching that benchmark would not be much of a victory.

Analysts note the current manifestation of a muscular loonie is more illusion than reality. The currency has been generally on a winning streak relative to the U.S. dollar since it traded as low as 93.65 cents U.S. a month ago, backed by rising commodity prices.

It's been on the move again this week, gaining more than one-quarter of a cent to 98.57 cents US in late-morning trades, after rising more than a cent the previous two days. Analysts caution that that's against the U.S. dollar. Against all major currencies, it's flying well under the radar. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cope said Bell is planning to offer IPTV in Toronto late this year or in early 2011.

Business travel boost propels Air Canada

Air Canada saw its passenger revenues and operating income grow in the second quarter as a strengthening economy continued to propel a recovery in business travel.

Canada's largest airline said Thursday its passenger revenues increased 12 per cent to $256 million, with about half coming from the key premium business and executive class category.

The airline recorded $75 million in operating income during the quarter, a $188-million improvement from the $113-million operating loss a year ago.

"Our financial performance in the quarter clearly shows that the economy is stabilizing and that we're making progress in both maximizing our revenues and lowering our costs," president and CEO Calin Rovinescu said Thursday during a conference call.

While there remains much work to do, Air Canada has over the last 15 months rebuilt an "adequate liquidity," achieved strong revenue management, better cost control and expanded its international network, he added.

Asian and European markets in which the airline added capacity performed well with Pacific routes logging a 37 per cent increase in revenue, the airline said.

Air Canada said it lost about $20 million in operating profits from flight cancellations after the closure of European airspace in mid-April because of volcanic ash.

LIES, DAMN LIES AND CORPORATE WELFARE

Other people's money

DAVID DESCÔTEAUX

Each passing day reminds me just how much the government takes us for idiots — by playing with words.

Take the case of corporate welfare. In a recent press release, the government said it was granting a "non-repayable loan" (you can't make this stuff up) to a multinational.

Translation: They "lent" millions of your tax dollars to IBM or Warner Brothers, but those companies have no obligation to reimburse you. Only problem: It's not true.

What do you expect? If politicians told you they take your money to give to millionaires, they would have a hard time getting re-elected.

But it gets worse.

A study by the Frontier Centre reveals that even the money (your money) they give to multinationals in loans that are "repayable" ... still doesn't get paid back!

Since 1982, Industry Canada has loaned more than $18 billion of your tax dollars to hundreds of companies — the equivalent of 360,000 years of hard labour at $50,000 per year.

Many of these companies are multinationals that pay their CEOs millions of dollars. They're usually well connected politically, or located in counties where the government wants to buy votes.

Bah! Who cares, you say. These are loans. The money will come back eventually, right? Wrong.

In 28 years, Canadian companies have paid back only $1.9 billion of the $18 billion loaned out — that's just 10 per cent of the total.

Keep in mind that these loans are often granted without interest. Collectively, we therefore sacrifice millions of dollars we could earn by investing that money elsewhere.

Even worse: Since our government is drowning in debt, it must borrow from the markets — at interest — to find the money. The total bill for taxpayers therefore ends up much higher than the $18-billion "loan."

Meanwhile, each day brings another misleading press release. On March 31, 2009, Industry Canada announced a "repayable investment" of $250 million to CAE, a provider of flight simulators.

"If politicians prefer giving our tax dollars to big business ... they should bite the bullet and do so openly and honestly. "

But when you dig a little, you discover that this gift is repayable ... "conditionally." If CAE sells enough simulators, the company will reimburse us. Otherwise, you can kiss that money goodbye.

Heads they win, tails you lose.

We can argue about the effectiveness of corporate subsidies. (They are a waste of money, but that's for another column.)

But if politicians prefer giving our tax dollars to big business instead of improving health care or lowering taxes, they should bite the bullet and do so openly and honestly.

INSURANCE

Manulife books huge loss

Insurance giant Manulife Financial Corp. booked a $2.4-billion loss in the second quarter as it took a big hit from the mark-to-market impact of lower equity markets and lower interest rates.

The Toronto-based financial services company said it took non-cash charges for a decline in stock markets, adding up to $1.7 billion and similar charges related for lower interest rates — particularly among the corporate and treasury bonds in which Manulife invests — of $1.5 billion during the period. The loss, which amounted to $1.36 per share, contrasted sharply with year-earlier earnings of $1.8 billion, or $1.09 per share.

"Our results for the second quarter were disappointing. Lower equity markets and historically low interest rates resulted, on a Canadian GAAP basis, in large non-cash charges in the form of mark-to-market increases to our reserves for policyholder liabilities," CEO Donald Guloien said.

The company's shares dropped sharply in early trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange, falling $1.14 or seven per cent to $14.86. THE CANADIAN PRESS

5 MINUTES WITH: BEN EZRA

Self-styled dating expert Ben Ezra has written a book on how to land the woman of your dreams, and says he can help you go to stud from dud in seven easy steps.

There are already a number of books and TV shows that advertise the sort of thing you're doing. What makes your approach different or revolutionary?
The main thing is the strong emphasis on self-development and the psychology behind the success. If you want to achieve anything in your life, your mind is where you have to start — not with the so-called "technique." If anything, technique should be last.

So then, what's one of the worst mistakes a guy can make in the initial stages of dating?
Calling without a plan. I used to be really nervous when I called a woman. I knew I was really interested but I would just call her and start talking to her about her life problems and her history and within one phone call I would have nothing left to talk about.

What about things like art and politics and current events? Those are things you could talk about, too.
You could, but it's better not to stay on the phone too long. I think it's best to interact face-to-face because a lot of people get comfortable just talking on the phone and at the end of the week your relationship is more on the phone than in real life.

I think the trouble many people have with these dating books and shows is they seem to advocate the objectification of women, or at the very least, reduce them to a target instead of a human being. What do you say to that sort of accusation?
I say that it's correct in a lot of ways. I personally don't even like to relate myself to these people and these so-called PUAs (pick-up artists), because I think a lot of them seem really sleazy and they give what I do a bad name.

So, do you advocate a sense of responsibility?
Oh, definitely. I put a disclaimer on the first page of my book, explaining to people that they should definitely not take advantage of this information.

Metro caught up with Murphy in Napa Valley to discuss his working with Roberts, his connection to the book and how he feels about causing breakups.

You and Julia have a great rapport. How did that relationship develop?

You know, from the moment we met, it was kind of like we just riffed. She makes me laugh and I can make her laugh. I've never had that with another actor like I've had that with her. And also, I went into the process being a big fan.

I was the first in line to see Sleeping with the Enemy. So I think that she felt, rightly so, that I loved her and would protect her and was invested in her being a success. She's sort of like the sister I always wanted, but never had. I have one brother. I always wanted a sister, and lo and behold, I got Julia Roberts. Not a bad gig.

Are you worried the movie is going to break up a lot of couples?

Well, there's two women in my life who got divorced because of the book. I think that the power of the book, and I hope the movie, is that it says to people — particularly, I think, women and gay men — 'if you're not happy, change.'

Be brave enough to walk away from what other people tell you you should be. I hope that it doesn't cause divorces so much as that it launches a discussion of, 'OK, why do you feel you're stuck?' Because, you know, not everybody can take a year off of their life and travel all the way around the world and find themselves. And I don't think you need to do that to find yourself. I think you can find yourself by maybe reading the book or seeing the movie and just asking yourself the question, 'Am I happy? If I'm not, how can I become more happy?' I think most people don't do that.

"I bet after this movie I'm going to get, 'Eat Pray Love made me get a divorce.' And then I'll have to call them up and send them to therapy."
DIRECTOR RYAN MURPHY

Did you have a personal relationship to the book before filming?

Oh my God, yeah. I think things come to you for a reason. I went through a bad breakup, and literally, I walked into a bookstore and it was literally being unpacked. I read it as a fan, I really deeply related to it, I felt in my life I wanted to learn those things, and I did. And when I did that is when my world opened up. I've had such a great six months.

Lundgren fights back

Swedish actor teams with Sly Stallone again for The Expendables
Tough guy has no plans to retire

STEVE GOW

A quarter of a century since Dolph Lundgren met Sylvester Stallone in Rocky IV, the Swedish action star is finally dueling Sly again in The Expendables and no one is more pleased than the man who played Ivan Drago.

"It's been 25 years since we last squared off and it was a lot of fun," said Lundgren. "(Stallone) writes in a very old-school way in which all the characters are very colourful and very funny ... so it was really one of those projects that you can't turn down."

Adding motive to the offer, Stallone had cast everyone from Jet Li to Bruce Willis in the film. If combining action stars for an old-school knuckle-duster was the brainstorm of Stallone, he might have to thank the rising popularity of mixed martial arts.

"A lot of young kids, they grew up on green-screen wire movies but they've seen MMA (mixed martial arts) and they know what one punch does to a guy's face," said Lundgren of the rebirth of hardcore action. "It was refreshing not to have green screens and wires and tons of stunt teams but you're actually doing your own stunts ... the audience gets to see their action star do it for real, which I think is how it all got started and, in my opinion, the way it should be."

"I was hated in Sweden for many years for going to America and making bad action movies but then they kind of came around."
LUNDGREN ON BEING ASKED TO RUN FOR POLITICAL OFFICE IN SWEDEN

While The Expendables will mark Lundgren's 25th year shooting exhausting thrillers, the Swede insisted he has no plans on retiring from action movies.

"You know it's going to be over one day," said Lundgren. "I look at guys like Clint Eastwood who last year grabbed a shotgun and beat a few people up (in Gran Torino) so I suppose I have a few years left I hope."

25 years of Action: Lundgren's Three Most Memorable Roles.

- Rocky IV — As Russian nemesis Ivan Drago, Lundgren had Rocky shaking in his boots and everyone saying "I must break you!"
- Masters of the Universe — Who else could've played He-Man in this 1987 adaptation of the popular toy franchise?
- Universal Soldier — Lundgren co-starred with Jean-Claude Van Damme in this 1992 thriller that has spurned sequels including a forthcoming version.

Arterton ditches glamour for Creed

PHIL BROWN
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Gemma Arterton is a British beauty who has served time as a Bond girl as well as arm candy for the leads of Clash Of The Titans and Prince Of Persia.

However, on Aug. 13, Arterton ditches glamour for the remarkable low budget indie The Disappearance Of Alice Creed. She is one of only three actors in the tense thriller about a kidnapping gone wrong that's set almost entirely in a single location.

just wave and go.

Simply put, it's an actor driven film that gives Gemma a chance to show off her skills. "That's exactly why I did the movie," Arterton told Metro. "I had to show myself that I could act again because I hadn't felt like I was challenged in that sense recently."

The film marks an impressive debut for writer/director J. Blakeson, who had nothing but short films to his name before this. Now he's being courted by Hollywood, but when Gemma Arterton signed on to play the title role, she was taking quite a risk. "When I read the script I thought that it was so clever and that he was clearly raw talent," explained the actress.

"I'm not that bothered about maintaining a level of stardom, because I'm not really interested in that stuff. I'm quite happy doing some smaller movies and theatre."
GEMMA ARTERTON ON BLOCKBUSTERS AND CELEBRITY

"I thought, 'everybody has to take a risk at some point in their career.' Somebody took a risk by casting me in my first movie and I have to do it too. So I put all my trust in him."

The difficult role required the young actress to be bound to a bed for most of the film, crying in fear and uncertain of the motives of her captors. "It was pretty grueling stuff," recalled Arterton. "I was in a constant state of really horrible anxiety. I had to cry all day for two days, which you're not supposed to do, and at one point I couldn't see because my eyes were so exhausted." The brief and cheap production was difficult for everyone involved, but also one that proved to be quite rewarding. As Arterton jokingly said, "Making the movie felt like a guilty pleasure. Like we were all doing it for fun before going off to get our mortgage repayments."

Aussie films come of age

Movies from Down Under are maturing with more genre-based storytelling, says one Australian director

ADAM NAYMAN
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

"I think there's a new generation of filmmakers in Australia," says David Michod, whose debut feature Animal Kingdom is the second thriller from Down Under to play on Canadian screens this summer, following Nash Edgerton's tricky The Square. "It's a reaction against the films that immediately proceeded our own."

Michod speaks specifically of a cycle of "small, intimate, social-realist films," which he adds "didn't travel very well. I think that this new wave of Australian filmmakers is interested in moving in a different direction, and in embracing genre."

Animal Kingdom is unapologetically a genre film: A moody crime drama about an orphaned teen (James Frechette) gradually drawn into the criminal activities of his extended family. "I moved to Melbourne from Sydney when I was 18," explains Michod, "and I was reading a lot about its criminal history. I was particularly engrossed in these books by a guy named Tom Noble, who used to be a police reporter in the 1980s. It was a very colourful period — the last days of these dangerous armed robbery crews, and their feud with these hardened, old-school armoured robbery cops."

"I've obviously absorbed a world of influences, and they might be subliminally visible in the film. But I definitely wasn't working from anybody else's template."
DAVID MICHOD

Although it's loosely based on a true story, Animal Kingdom most strongly evokes the fictional work of American film directors like Michael Mann and James Gray. "I've obviously absorbed a world of influences, and they might be subliminally visible in the film," says Michod. "But I definitely wasn't working from anybody else's template."

Connections

- There's more connecting Animal Kingdom and The Square than their country of origin: Both star Joel Edgerton, whose older brother Nash directed the later film.

Movie reviews

The Immaculate Conception of Little Dizzle
Genre: Drama
Director: David Russo
Stars: Marshall Allan
●●●½
Debut features don't come much more audacious than David Russo's The Immaculate Conception of Little Dizzle, which takes its lead character on a journey from office worker to janitor to unwitting victim (or is it beneficiary?) of advanced chemical-engineering research. This is innovative, confident filmmaking that manages to address a host of big issues — including class-struggle and different iterations of "family" — without sacrificing its impressively lo-fi trippiness. ADAM NAYMAN

Step Up 3D
Genre: Dance/Musical
Director: Jon Chu
Stars: Adam Sevani, Rick Malambri
It was only a matter of time before the resurgence in popularity of 3-D led to pun-filled sequel titles in the grand tradition of Jaws 3-D.

But the folks behind the dance-happy Step Up film series can't really be faulted, since they're just sticking to what they do — the last one was called Step Up 2 the Streets, after all.

Loosely tying itself to the last movie, Step Up 3D opens with comic-relief sidekick Moose (Adam Sevani) getting oriented at New York University, promising his mom (a curiously uncredited Kathy Najimy) that he's given up dancing for his studies.

That promise lasts all of a minute, naturally, as he stumbles into a commune of shiny, happy dancers living in the kind of tricked-out warehouse space poor artists only live in in movies like this. They're led by an earnest and unfathomably uncharismatic aspiring filmmaker (Rick Malambri). But of course the main event here is supposed to be the dancing — of which there is plenty — and the 3D — of which there is too much. NED EHRBAR

The Good, The Bad, The Weird
Genre: Foreign
Director: Ji-woon Kim
Stars: Woo-sung Jung
Insane Asian/Western antics from director Ji-woon Kim, one of the most stylish loose cannons working in the Korean film industry. This epic homage to spaghetti westerns, and virtually every other form of pulp entertainment offers one of the most joyous nights at the movies this summer. The plot involves the three titular characters searching for a mysterious treasure map, but it's kind of irrelevant. This is a movie about thrills and spectacle. PHIL BROWN

The laugh police

The Other Guys
Genre: Action/Comedy
Director: Adam McKay
Stars: Will Ferrell, Mark Wahlberg
Just when you thought buddy cop movies were as outmoded as Tetris and neon scrunchies, The Other Guys comes along and resuscitates a once dead genre (no thanks to you, Cop Out).

Not since the days of Beverly Hills Cop and Lethal Weapon has there been such a seamless melding of action and comedy playing out over a ping pong match of talented leading actors, in this case Will Ferrell and Mark Wahlberg.

You know those hardcore, kick butt cops who always get their man? Well, Wahlberg and Ferrell are the other guys, two NYPD detectives strapped to their desks, living in the shadow of a duo of super cops (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Samuel L. Jackson, both in a shining hour). But when they finally get the opportunity to step up to the plate, they find themselves in way over their heads.

Uproariously funny yet stealthily topical, the film, written and directed by Adam McKay (Anchorman, Talladega Nights, Step Brothers), features a superb supporting cast, including Michael Keaton, Bobby Cannavale, Rob Riggle and Steve Coogan, but it's really Wahlberg and Ferrell's time to shine as they pay homage to greats like Martin and Lewis and Murtaugh and Riggs. Here's hoping they'll continue the grand tradition with multiple sequels as well. NED EHRBAR

Get Low
Genre: Drama
Director: Aaron Schneider
Stars: Robert Duvall
●●●½
Get Low stars Robert Duvall and Bill Murray, which tells you almost everything you need to know about the movie. It's a challenging drama about forgiveness that gives Duvall a chance to dig deep into the heart of a rejected hermit who plans his own funeral, but also a production with that playful sense of deadpan humour. First time director Aaron Schneider proves to be an adept visual storyteller, crafting a tale of surprising emotional resonance that will win you over. PHIL BROWN

The Death of Alice Blue
Genre: Horror
Director: Park Bench
Stars: Alex Appel
●●●½
Short on budget, but long on style and quirk, writer/director/actor Park Bench's literally biting satire is a real find. The awkwardly gorgeous Alex Appel plays shy, uptight office girl Alice who gets a job working at a slick, glossy office space that is run by corporate vampires. Part True Blood, part The Office and part Dario Argento designer horror show, The Death of Alice Blue would make a fascinating triple bill with American Psycho and Vampires Kiss. CHRIS ALEXANDER

At 84, Hugh Hefner still manages multiple girlfriends, the business he loves with its print, video, online and smart phone components, while putting his pioneering life into historical context. Canadian documentarian Brigitte Berman won exclusive access to Hefner's 4,000 diaries for her rather worshipful documentary that is glossy, nostalgic and oddly moving, even as it tilts heavily towards Hefner's agenda and persona. ANNE BRODIE

GOOD, BAD AND UGLY OF DANCE

There was a time when people would consistently pay money to see actors Feather Step and Dos-y-dos on screen.

For most of the twentieth century dance movies were a Hollywood staple, making stars out of hoofers Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and seeing half the Best Picture Oscars from the years 1958 to 1968 going to movies with smooth dance moves.

Some dance movies from the classic age are memorable — Singin' in the Rain has a rare 100 per cent positive rating on RottenTomatoes. Others not so much. Remember Yolanda and the Thief? Me neither. But generally audiences were enthralled by Astaire's graceful moves or Kelly's athletic style. Producers of this weekend's Step Up 3D are hoping for a throw back to those heady days and that audiences will be lured to the theatre by their film's mix of dance and eye popping 3-D.

Dance on film died out during the late 1960s as movies with social messages and hard hitting dramas took centre stage but one actor single handedly brought back hip swiveling to the big screen. John Tavolta's performances in Saturday Night Fever and Grease opened the flood gates for dozens of high stepping films in the 1970s. Here's a list of the good, the bad and the ugly of '70s and '80s dance.

The Good

Loosely based on the life of screenwriter Dean Pitchford Footloose is the story of a spunky Chicago teen (Kevin Bacon) who moves to a small town where dancing and rock music have been outlawed. John Travolta, Tom Cruise and Rob Lowe were all offered the lead role, but Bacon sizzles as Ren McCormack, the rebellious boy who teaches the town to kick up their heels to the tune of Let's Hear it For the Boy. (Honourable Mention: Pee-Wee's Big Adventure. Not a dance movie but Pee-wee's (Paul Ruebens) Peewee Dance to the song Tequila is a classic.)

The Bad

Breakin' 2: Electric Boogaloo isn't remembered as a great movie (it isn't) or for Ice-T's performance, no, it is best remembered as the facetious name given to any unnecessary sequel. For example, Tron 2: Electric Boogaloo or perhaps Titanic 2: Electric Boogaloo.

The Ugly

Newsweek called 1980's spirited but ridiculous attempt to cash in on the disco craze Can't Stop the Music, "the first all-singing, all-dancing horror film; the Dawn of the Dead of the disco era."

Kanye Tweets

Celeb

Kanye West has had verbal diarrheic outbursts before — hint: MTV Music Video Awards — but now you can read his unfiltered inner monologue all the time. West, who once said he'd never join Twitter, has joined the social networking site. Sample tweet from his enchanted life: "I specifically ordered persian rugs with cherub imagery!!! What do I have to do to get a simple persian rug with cherub imagery uuuuugh."

A-Rod's 600th

Baseball

Alex Rodriguez is no stranger to the celebrity gossip pages since his move to New York — including a reported dalliance with Madonna and a ruined marriage — and he has instilled outrage in his fans after his admission to using performance enhancing drugs in the past. But will all be forgiven after he joined the exclusive 600 home run club this week against the Toronto Blue Jays? Only time will tell.

Mega music hit

Love The Way You Lie

This collaboration between the "abused" Rihanna and "recovering" Eminem helped the troubled rapper's Recovery album sell like a bat out of hell upon its release on June 18 and it continues to top the charts. To our ears, Love The Way You Lie is one of the most powerful songs of the year with a message that smacks your senses like no other tune has for some time.

Kick-Ass

DVD

This controversial comic book movie garnered some good reviews and some scathing remarks over its gratuitous violence and language — especially in the case of pre-teen Chloe Moretz as Hit-Girl. Is it funny? Or is it too much? Either way, you can pick it up — it's out on DVD and Blu-Ray this week.

Inception vs. The Other Guys

Will Christopher Nolan's Inception continue dominating the box office, or is the dream thriller's reign over? It looks like Will Ferrell and Mark Wahlberg are set to take over the top spot at the nation's theatres as The Other Guys prepares to assault the weekend. A terrific marketing campaign, a great action-comedy premise and solid reviews give this film the makings of a hit.

The Suburbs

Album

Independent Canadian rockers Arcade Fire proved this week that they still have it. Their latest album, The Suburbs, already sits at No. 1 on HMV Canada's CD sales chart.

Sandra Bullock

Celeb

Sandra Bullock has been through a lot this year: An Academy Award and a broken marriage. Despite all this she still landed in the No. 1 spot on Forbes' list of top earning actresses. Reese Witherspoon, Cameron Diaz and Jennifer Aniston also top the list.

THE ULTIMATE ALBUM CHART

If you work anywhere in the music industry, you watch the Billboard charts like your life depends on them. That's because it does.

Since the 1950s, the Billboard charts are how the industry has kept score. The two most important charts are the Hot 100 (the top 100 singles) and the Billboard 200 (the top 200 albums). They gauge week-to-week popularity of songs and CDs. Songs/albums are ranked using data from retail sales (via SoundScan, their point-of-purchase data collection mechanism) and radio airplay (via precise monitoring through a service called BDS Radio). The more a song/album sells or gets played on the radio, the higher its ranking. The higher a song/album's position, the more momentum it picks up, leading to more sales and more airplay — and more profits for the label/artist.

It's also a horse race for the public. If you've ever listened to Casey Kasem (or virtually any other radio countdown show) or just watched how your favourite album moved around the wall at your record store, you've seen how the charts work.

Make the charts and you're in the game. If your song/album goes up, you're winning. If it goes down, you're losing. Not make them at all and you're not a Big-Time Player. But change may be coming. The Ultimate Chart is the product of Big Champagne, a company that tracks file-trading activity on P2P sites. They noticed that what was being illegally traded online — i.e. what was popular — differed greatly from which songs and artists appeared on Billboard. "Why aren't we using that data in figuring out which songs are big and which aren't?"

Big Champagne then started monitoring plays on MySpace, YouTube and Facebook. They looked at songs played on TV and those sold as ringtones. And when everything was compiled, big discrepancies emerged between what Billboard reported and what Big Champagne contended was reality with music consumers.

Record labels and retailers love this kind of data. A migration from traditional Billboard charts to the Ultimate Chart would have enormous repercussions for music — even if 99 per cent if consumers would be oblivious.

It's another example of how the Internet is drastically changing everything about music.

▶ Plenty of fresh and delicious fare was served at Miriam Streiman and Neil Epstein's wedding, including cured duck and pork.

▶ Bread, fruit and cheese laid out on tables covered in burlap sacks awaited guests.

A celebration of love & love of food

Even the Rabbi knows this wedding is as much about food as it is about love.

He is standing with Miriam Streiman and Neil Epstein under a canopy in front of a pond that flows into the Don River. The bride's grandfather's prayer shawl and cattails from the couple's new farm are draped on top of the chuppah.

Today, Rabbi Ed Elkin says, is a celebration of Streiman and Epstein's commitment and love for each other, but also of "food that is delicious, healthy and good for the environment."

The guests smile. A few chuckle softly. Streiman, 30, and Epstein, 31, love food. There really is no overstating that.

"Cooking together, and sharing a table together, is how we show love"
MIRIAM STREIMAN, CHEF

And so, their wedding is about fresh, local food, country living, family, and the Jewish faith, perfectly packaged together in an old industrial building at the Evergreen Brick Works, along the Don Valley.

Birds chirp and bees buzz at the old brickyard, which has been turned into a community environment centre but still has faded bricks and shattered windows. Fruits trees and tomato plants are tagged for sale nearby.

The ceremony begins with a rollicking stroll down the aisle to an alt-bluegrass band playing Johnny Cash's Ring of Fire. It ends with a smashed glass, shouts of "Mazel Tov!" and a long, luscious kiss.

While the bride and groom slip away for photos, the guests direct their attention to the food. They mingle over bread, cured duck and pork, sheep's milk cheeses and fruit laid out on tables covered in burlap sacks.

Food has always been a central part of Streiman and Epstein's relationship.

Streiman says Epstein wooed her with raspberries and award-winning garlic from his family farm in Pefferlaw, Ont. And she describes, in sensual detail, pulling beets and carrots out of the earth in preparation for one of their first meals together on that farm, soil clinging to the vegetables and their hands.

Streiman, cooks using instinct, touch and feeling. "Cooking together, and sharing a table together, is how we show love," she says. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Wilson Farris races around Stonehenge II located in Hunt, Texas.

Texas attraction being dismantled and relocated
Tribute to English counterpart on its last legs

Another Stonehenge

The quirky roadside attraction, known as Stonehenge II, mimics the mysterious prehistoric circle of stone monuments about 160 kilometres southeast of London.

Like its English counterpart, Stonehenge II, in the Texas Hill Country about a 90-minute drive northwest of San Antonio, draws curious visitors from around the world.

Unlike the more famous version, the Texas attraction, erected a generation ago under the guidance of a whimsical landowner, is headed for a new home.

Al Shepperd, a Dallas hotel owner who retired to the Hill Country, commissioned the work in 1989 and died five years later. Now his heirs want to sell the nearly nine-hectare riverfront property, but they worried what potential buyers would think of the landmark.

The Hill Country Arts Foundation, where the elder Shepperd served on the board of directors, has accepted Shepperd's donation of Stonehenge, plus a couple of replica Easter Island heads, and is raising $50,000 for a construction company to move the items to its campus a few kilometres to the east in Ingham, hopefully by the end of summer.

The replica Polynesian statues were moved in mid-July. Now, visitors have only a few more weeks to see Stonehenge II the way Shepperd intended before it's dismantled and relocated.

"It won't be the same," said artist Doug Hill, who lives across the road and built Stonehenge II at the direction of his neighbour and friend. "It changed everything. It brought traffic. We had a couple of wrecks with people stopping in the middle of the road."

Hill started Shepperd's creative juices in 1989 with the gift of a chunk of limestone deposited in the middle of the hay field near Shepperd's home and it has grown from there.

Language barrier real, say Latin American Jays

Lost in translation

Two decades before Jose Bautista was the major league home run leader he was a sharp student learning English at a private school in the Dominican Republic, so when he became involved in professional baseball he didn't need a translator.

Lucky for him.

As a teenager, Bautista spent six months at the Yankees' Dominican academy and six more with the Diamondbacks, and doesn't recall a single organized English class for the teenage prospects.

On Tuesday, Chicago White Sox manager Ozzie Guillen sounded off to reporters about baseball's enduring linguistic divide, questioning why the Sox class-A team had an interpreter for a Korean prospect but no paid translator for a large group of Latin American players.

When Bautista glanced at Guillen's comments, he knew the Sox manager had a point.

Though Bautista is fully bilingual, he says a language barrier persists in pro baseball, and that it damages careers when communication falters between players and coaches.

"I've seen a lot of talented players that I thought could play the game and just because of miscommunication and some assumptions that were made, stuff didn't get aired out," Bautista said before a recent game in New York.

MARC SEBOTA/GETTY IMAGES

"I've seen a lot of talented players that I thought could play the game and just because of miscommunication and some assumptions that were made, stuff didn't get aired out."
JOSE BAUTISTA

He didn't want to name specific players, but he could have been talking about the guy two lockers to his left.

When the Jays traded for Yunel Escobar last month, some reports in the mainstream media labelled the former Braves shortstop indifferent on the field and aloof with the press, even as Spanish-speaking reporters who had dealt with him described him as easy-going and approachable.

Escobar maintains teammates and reporters simply misunderstood him, and his weak grasp of English may have contributed to the problem.

When Escobar left Cuba for Miami in 2004 he spoke no English, and says he received only a month of formal instruction as a Braves minor leaguer.

Four years into his big league career he's still learning English, but says the transition to the pros was rough.

"It was really tough when I confronted that reality," he said.

"But at the same time, I have always had Latin players on my team to help me."

Without league-wide standards on how much English instruction prospects are required to receive, teams each set their own rules.

For Blue Jays prospects, English instruction starts with daily classes at their Dominican academy, then intensifies once players graduate to the club's minor league complex in Dunedin, Fla., where they attend daily classes.

"It's a major part (of a player's growth)," said Charlie Wilson, the Jays' director of minor league operations.

"A player cannot reach his full potential on the field until he has a full grasp of the English language."

For Jays fans longing for earnest signs of the organization's climb back towards contender status, Wednesday's callup of catcher J.P. Arencebia represents something more than a routine injury fill-in.

Arencebia appears in a major league uniform Friday for the first time — the Jays' choice to replace injured catcher John Buck — and there is the undeniable promise of a rising star attached to his arrival.

Already there is the feeling among critics, bloggers and media experts that Arencebia could eventually shoulder his own era.

"It's unbelievable," Arencebia said Thursday in a phone interview from the airport in Las Vegas, when asked about the feeling surrounding his first trip to the big leagues.

"It's something I've worked for my whole life and something you dream of from the time you first get into the sport."

When he arrives Friday, Arencebia will almost certainly back up Jose Molina while Buck nurses a torn thumb on the 15-day disabled list.

Lawyer says report is 'designed to create a circus-like atmosphere'

Lance Armstrong's lawyer has lashed out at a report that a former teammate of the seven-time Tour de France champion told investigators Armstrong knew of widespread performance-enhancing drug use on the U.S. Postal Service team.

Lawyer Bryan D. Daly said there are hundreds of former Armstrong teammates who would deny he broke the rules to win.

The New York Times reported in Thursday's edition that a cyclist, who was identified only as a former Armstrong teammate, backed up claims by Floyd Landis that the Postal Service team engaged in systematic doping with Armstrong's knowledge and approval.

The unidentified cyclist told the newspaper he had spoken with federal investigators looking into cheating in pro cycling. Prosecutors and special agent Jeff Novitzky of the Food and Drug Administration are running the probe, which is focused on a sport that Armstrong once dominated with consecutive Tour victories from 1999-2005.

Armstrong has strongly denied any allegations that he doped.

The unidentified cyclist detailed some of his own drug use to investigators, even though he has never tested positive for performance-enhancing drugs or methods, the newspaper reported. He said he has not been called to testify before the grand jury in Los Angeles that has been convened for the case.

Big Ben shows NFL he's come a long way

Commissioner raves about Roethlisberger, but suspension still stands

Ben Roethlisberger got a thumb's up from NFL commissioner Roger Goodell, and praise for the way he's reshaping his life. What's missing for now is a reduction of his six-game suspension.

Goodell met with Roethlisberger while visiting the Steelers' training camp Thursday, but, while saying the quarterback is going beyond what the league is mandating, didn't cut his suspension for bad behaviour to four games.

The NFL will continue to monitor Roethlisberger's progress before he and Goodell meet in New York later this month and the commissioner makes a final decision as to how long the Steelers star will be out. A reduction would allow Roethlisberger to play Oct. 17 at home against Cleveland rather than Oct. 31 at New Orleans.

"I think he's understanding the seriousness of the issue and is working to improve and to make better decisions."

NFL COMMISSIONER ROGER GOODELL, ON BEN ROETHLISBERGER'S CONDUCT SINCE MUCH-PUBLICIZED INCIDENT

"I'm very encouraged by what he's doing," Goodell said. "I'll take the period of time that I have before making the decision and make it probably right before the regular season."

Asked what the league still needs to see, Goodell said, "He's got to work through the program that's designed for him to help him. A lot of that is confidential, but he's done it and he's done it with enthusiasm. I think that's a good thing."

Goodell was vague when asked several times if Roethlisberger's suspension could be reduced even further. Later, league officials clarified that the commissioner's April 21 ruling specified a minimum of four games for his alleged sexual assault on a college student early March 5 in Milledgeville, Ga.

Roethlisberger was not charged, but was disciplined by Goodell for violating the NFL personal conduct policy.

Goodell praised Roethlisberger's efforts following the image-damaging incident that left some of the quarterback's biggest fans angry and disgusted.

"He hasn't just done what he's been told to do, I think he's worked hard to really try to improve and focus on himself and understand what's he's been though and what he's going to do differently going forward," Goodell said. "I think that's a very positive thing."

Besides trying to be more fan friendly at camp — he signs autographs for a half-hour almost daily — Roethlisberger has made several unpublicized appearances to serve dinners for the Salvation Army and to visit with the families of seriously ill children.

Rangers bailed out by old friend

The Texas Rangers exited federal bankruptcy protection Thursday, about 14 hours after Hall of Fame pitcher Nolan Ryan's group was awarded the team at a marathon auction showdown with billionaire Mark Cuban.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Stacey Jernigan's approval of the team's reorganization plan clears the way for Major League Baseball to formally approve Ryan and sports attorney Chuck Greenberg as the team's owners next week, before the group's financing guarantee expires Aug. 12.

The court-appointed restructuring officer and creditors had opposed the bankruptcy plan, filed in May as a way to push through the sale to the Greenberg-Ryan group. But Thursday, they said they supported the revised plan, in part because the auction resulted in a higher price for the AL West-leading Rangers.

"I was wrong," said Andrew Leblanc, an attorney for some of the top creditors. "I've never been happier to say I was wrong."

Tension builds at Redskins camp

Even as the Washington Redskins ordered an MRI on Albert Haynesworth's sore left knee, coach Mike Shanahan gave yet another reason why he's adamant about having the two-time All-Pro defensive tackle pass the team's conditioning test.

Haynesworth, says the coach, missed way too many practices last season.

"I've got all the stats in there, how many games he played where he didn't practise throughout the whole week," Shanahan said. "If you don't practise, you're not going to play well."

The Haynesworth soap opera entered its second week Thursday when the knee kept him from taking the conditioning test for the third straight day. That prompted a different sort of test — an MRI — that Shanahan called a "preventative measure."

The knee has bothered Haynesworth throughout previous seasons.

Last year, he missed two days of training camp to have fluid injected into the knee, a procedure he said had become routine for him to fight the wear and tear of practice.

Potential top pick eyes world juniors

Couturier says he's not overly concerned with 2011 NHL draft More focused on challenge of making national junior team as an 18-year-old

Sean Couturier's name has already been mentioned as a potential first overall pick in the 2011 NHL draft, but the 18-year-old centre doesn't want to think that far ahead just yet.

The American-born, Bathurst, N.B.-raised son of former Los Angeles Kings left-winger Sylvain Couturier is too busy trying to make Canada's team for the next world junior hockey championship in December in Buffalo, N.Y.

"It's pretty fun to be up there, but I try not to think about it," Couturier said Thursday on Day 2 of the Canadian junior team development camp at Mile One Centre in St. John's. "There's still a whole season to play."

Couturier and Saint John Sea Dogs defenceman Nathan Beaulieu are the only 18-year-old players in the 46-man camp who are eligible for the 2011 draft.

The only other undrafted player is Vancouver Giants defenceman Neil Manning, who was passed over by the 30 NHL clubs in June in Los Angeles.

Couturier won the Jean Beliveau Trophy as the scoring champion of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League with the Drummondville Voltigeurs last season with 41 goals and 55 assists in 68 games.

The six-foot-three forward was also plus-62 and has drawn rave reviews for consistent two-way play that is sometimes compared to either of the NHL's Staal brothers, Carolina's Eric or Pittsburgh's Jordan — particularly for his ability to shut down opposing centres.

♈ Aries March 21-April 19 Do you lack ambition? Of course not, but that does not mean you have to work 16 hours a day to get ahead in the world. You've heard the phrase "Work smarter, not harder".

♉ Taurus April 20-May 21 Setbacks are testing your commitment and if you are not entirely sure you are on the right track you may be tempted to give up. Don't!

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Whatever your duties and commitments today you must also find time to do the things that you enjoy. It may be difficult to let your hair down and enjoy yourself, but difficult and impossible are not the same things.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 You can sit at home brooding on what's gone wrong, or you can get up, go out and find ways to have fun. Get together with people who bring a smile to your face.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 Both at home and at work you will find things come easier to you today than they have done for quite some time, and they will come easier still if you make an effort to make things happen.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 Certain people may be obstructive and there may be times when you come close to losing your temper, but that is exactly what they are hoping you will do. Stay calm and don't give them any excuse to retaliate.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 Important people will look on you favourably if you stick to what you know, but they will see right through you if you pretend to be what you are not.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 If someone annoys you today you must let them know that if they continue along their current negative path you will come down on them hard. Are you being too tough? No, you can't be tough enough.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 You need to remind yourself how much is possible and how good life can be when you choose light over dark in everything you do. The world is still a wonderful place, not least because you are in it.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 A little bit of deception may be no bad thing today, especially if the person you are dealing with is somewhat emotional by nature. Why worry them with reality when you can cheer them with uplifting stories?

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 The cracks in a working partnership are getting a bit too wide to ignore, so make it your main aim today to either close up the gap or end the liaison once and for all.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Few things happen in life purely by chance and if you keep that thought in mind today you may see the links between a series of apparently random events.

drive
It forces us to think big. It made us question what we were doing with our vehicles and why we weren't doing more. It's what motivated us to help a community with deep roots but not deep pockets. It's why we went to Toronto Community Housing on Gilder Drive and turned a dumping ground into a garden for the people who live there.
change
It's using one thing to make another. It's showing people that the Kia Sorento is different by filling it with volunteers who want to make a difference. It's demonstrating how its towing capacity, cargo space and horsepower work by using them to do actual yard work. It's less about saying how good a vehicle is and more about using it to do good.
